NELMAR CONSTRUCTION IS LEED CERTIFIED FOR "GREEN CONSTRUCTION"

FAIR OAKS, CALIF. (May 6, 2009) – Nelmar Construction Incorporated, a construction company well known for its work on occupied buildings, announced today that it is now a member of the United States Green Building Council (USGBC) and is now certified to build LEED construction.

Nelmar Construction has recognized the need and business advantage offered by environmental conservation and responsibility. In recognition of the importance of the USGBC and the LEED certification program, Nelmar Construction is now a member of the USGBC. The president, Henry V. Bartels is now a LEED Accredited Professional (LEED AP), to facilitate the certification process on any project where LEED may be implemented.

Nelmar Construction has demonstrated its commitment to ensuring that environmental responsibility, along with the jobsite safety, legal and ethical business practices, emphasis on quality construction and focus on budget and schedule, is offered on every project we build.

"Energy efficiency and environmental responsibility are becoming more and more important to developers and owners," said Henry V. Bartels, LEED AP and president of Nelmar Construction. "Energy cost increases are driving a greater desire to manage those resources efficiently. State and local governments are increasing their environmental and water usage standards, and in some cases offering incentives for "eco friendly" building and operating practices as well. Green building has become smart building, and we're very pleased that we can support this growing trend in our industry."

We encourage you to contact us today. We look forward to answer your questions about LEED construction projects and what it could mean to you.
